International cooperation

International cooperation of universities and research institutions plays an important role in improving the quality of education for students of all levels of education, personal development, and the qualifications of teachers and university staff.

The obtaining of the experience of studying and teaching foreign audiences, learning the approaches to teaching in other countries, meeting with the know-how of foreign teachers, and creating and strengthening scientific cooperation are the most suitable tools for this. It also brings a unique experience of working in the environment of other cultures and increases the level of foreign languages, skills, and experience of working in international research groups. That is why mobility is the fundamental key of the Bologna Process, which consists in the structural reform of the national systems of higher education in European countries with the aim of increasing their compatibility and the ability to provide and receive high-quality education. Nowadays, in European Union countries, it is common that a student can extend the list of studied subjects at the expense of subjects studied at another university and in another country, and a teacher can improve his pedagogical level through a pedagogical internship in another country, i.e., a foreign and often international audience.
